The most fundamental element of design is:

Lines. The most fundamental elements of design are lines. Lines are used to help communicate to the audience what they should be looking at or pay attention to.

You have created a style sheet that contains your logos. This could possibly include typefaces, your color palette, and how pictures and images are to be used.

True. You have created a style sheet that contains your logos. This can include typefaces, your color palette, and how pictures and images are to be used.

A _____ is like a design system, but as its name suggests, it is limited to the elements and features that populate a User Interface or UI.

UI kit. A UI kit is like a design system, but it is limited to the elements and features that populate a User Interface.

A component in Figma contains the following characteristics:

An instance.
A master.

A prototype is a diagram or a set of diagrams that consists of simple lines and shapes representing the skeleton of a website's functionality.

False. A prototype is an almost-working model or mock-up of the product which you use to test it with prospective users and stakeholders.

On the _____ side of the layers panel in Figma, you will find the local components page.

right-hand. On the right-hand side of the layers panel in Figma, you will find the local components page.